"What force least expected does the greatest damage to buildings?" a News

"It is difficult to tell. But I will venture to say that you would never bill introduced by him which is one of expect violin playing to injure the walls of a building. Yet that is cer- fered. It has received the hearty entainly the case. There have been in dorsement of a great part of the press stances when the walls of brick and of the country and its passage is restone structures have been seriously impaired by the vibrations of a violin. Of course, these cases are unusual, large influence. In one of his speechbut the facts are established. The es in advocacy of this measure Sena-force, and when they come in contact ence upon structures of stone, brick or iron. Of course, it takes continuous playing for many years to loosen masonry or to make iron brittle, but that result is obtained. In the great Masonic Temple in Chicago I have thought of what the result might be if a man would stand on the first floor at the bottom of the 19-story light well, and there play continuously. The result could be more easily seen there than almost any place else, because the vibration gathers force as it sweeps upward. A man can feel the vibration of a violin on an ironclad ocean vessel, and at the same time be unable to hear the music. It is the regularity of the vibration which means so much. Like the constant dripping of water wearing away a stone, the incessant vibration of a violin makes its way to the walls and attacks their solidity." "But why doesn't the vibration ef fect the player?" "Because a man is a flexible object.

He can giv way to motion and resume his place again. A frame building would not be damaged by vibration, because the timbers are flexible. But it is different with masonry.

"You may have noticed that a dog crossing the room will shake the entire building, no matter how small the dog. A dog can shake a suspension bridge. There are some great and valuable bridges which dogs are never allowed to cross, except when carried. You see, in that case it is the regularity of the vibration that is so powerful. The dog's movement is a fixed and positive institution. The first step on the bridge is not noticed so much, but every step comes at the same interval, and with the same firmness. The force gathers momentum, and each step makes the bridge sway more. But there is another way that it may perhaps be illustrated better. As you sit there rise one foot partially on tiptoe. That's it. Now work your knee up and down rapidly and regularly. See how everything in the room rattles and the floor shakes? That illustrates the dog step's power better than anything else. You and I and all our friends could not jump up and down in this room and shake the floor as you have just shaken it while sitting down and using only the force of one leg. It is the regularity of the vibration which is powerful."

Stammering Prisoner.

Judge Pimbrick, of Arizona, while visiting a New Yorker a few weeks ago, relates an amusing experience which he had in his younger days when presiding over a police court in a southwestern town. His story is something like this:

One morning an Irish policeman brought a man named Sisson up for trial. The man stuttered, and when asked his name, he stammered out, "S-s-s-s-sis," and then gave it up.

Again I asked his name. "S-s-s-ssis," the same futile attempt.

After a few more efforts to obtain his name, which called forth more "sisses," I turned impatiently to the policeman and asked: "What is this prisoner charged with, officer?"

"I don't know for certain, yer honor," he replied, his eyes twinkling, "but I suppose it must be soda water."-Chicago Tribune.

Senator McCumber, of North Dakota, is making strenuous efforts to representative asked of a well known secure pure food legislation that will be practical and effective.

There is on the Senate calendar a the best measured of the kind yet ofcommended by a number of societies and organizations, which should have vibrations of a violin are something tor McCumber expressed his surprise terrible in their unseen, unbound that while our law against counterfeiting money is so severe and so thorwith regularity they bear their influ- oughly enforced, thousands of persons are counterfeiting food products of almost every kind with absolute impunity, and are permitted to work off their impure, and often dangerous, stuff in increasing quantities in every section of the country.

The reports of the Federal and State officials who have looked into the matter of food adulterations show such articles are consumed to an extent that will surprise those who have never studied the subject.

Some of the States have laws intended to prevent the adulteration of articles of food and drink, but we have as yet neither State nor Federal laws which can be called effective to any marked degree for the suppression of the impure food traffic, but the demand for such legislation is growing so fast that we may expect to see a decided reform in this respect before long .- Atlanta Journal.
